PREHISTORIC AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT IN THE NORTHERN SOUTHWEST

A Study in Changing Patterns of Land Use

By Michael A. Glassow

151 pp., illus., maps, tables, biblio., paper covers. 1980

$8.95

A significant contribution to our understanding of prehistoric cultural development in an important but relatively unstudied region, the northern Southwest. The author suggests that population growth is the primary stimulus underlying all cultural evolution, and points out that there has been insufficient attention given to this factor in the past, particularly in the American Southwest. After an excellent review of the literature, Glassow develops a theoretical model involving agricultural field types, agricultural facilities, settlement patterns, and adaptive stages, and applies his model to the extensive archaeological evidence that he and other scholars have painstakingly accumulated in the region under consideration.

Karok Myths

A.L. Kroeber and E.W. Gifford

Edited by Grace Buzaljiko, with a Foreword by Theodora Kroeber and a Folkloristic Commentary by Alan Dundes

"The materials are priceless in that they can never again be duplicated in the rich versions given here. This work is important for students of California ethnography, ethnology, and linguistics, to say nothing of folklore." —D.L. Olmsted, Editor-in-Chief, American Anthropologist

The Natural World of the California Indians

Robert F. Heizer and Albert B. Elsasser

This compact, information-packed volume surveys how California Indians defined tribelet territories, shows how cultural areas related to bioregional boundaries, and describes the patterns of village life. It explains the nature and uses of Indian tools and artifacts in procuring and preparing food and other necessities. It analyzes the richness and stability of food supplies, and describes hunting and fishing techniques. It situates the Indians within the interlocked, self-sustaining natural system they inhabited rather than exploited. And it summarizes the destruction of Indian ways, and the decimation of the Indian population, through the impact of whites.

Malki Museum press proudly announces the publication of a Native American poet, Wendy Rose, who is of Miwok and Hopi ancestry. Ms. Rose is a lecturer in the Department of Native American Studies at the University of California, Berkeley, and her poetry has been previously published in a number of literary magazines and in several small books. This anthology of her collected poems by Malki Museum Press has been made possible by a grant from the Literature Program of the National Endowment of the Arts. N. Scott Momaday, the Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist and poet, has paid tribute to Ms. Rose's poetry in his preface as follows: "The good, strong things which constitute this book are numerous and diverse. Wendy Rose reaches into many corners of experience, and her perceptions are acute and trustworthy . . . LOST COPPER . . . is supremely native . . . the book is a celebration."
