EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

In the two years (May 10, 2007-May 10, 2009) since the Motion Picture Association of America (MPAA) announced that “all smoking will [now] be considered” in movie ratings, the MPAA has not elevated the rating of a single motion picture released to theaters because of its tobacco content.

The MPAA has also failed to apply “tobacco descriptors” — in the explanatory labels associated with each MPAA rating — to most youth-rated movies with smoking rated by the MPAA and released to theaters nationwide. Since May 10, 2007 only 12 percent (10/84) of youth-rated, top box office films with tobacco imagery received MPAA tobacco descriptors. Only 7 percent (10/149) of all top box office films with tobacco content, including R-rated films, received descriptors.

Percentage of movies with smoking: Of the movies that achieved “Top Ten” box office ranking for at least a week, released in the two years after the MPAA’s May 10, 2007 announcement, 60 percent (181/301) have featured tobacco including:

- 22 percent of G and PG movies (15/67)
- 64 percent of PG-13 movies (87/135)
- 80 percent of R-rated movies (79/99).

In all, 56 percent (102/181) of the top box office movies with smoking released May 2007-May 2009 were youth-rated G, PG or PG-13. In 2008-9, only 6 percent (2/32) of top box office films rated G/PG featured tobacco imagery. This is a drop from the previous five years. However, it makes no substantial difference to young people’s exposure to on-screen smoking because, historically, there have been few G/PG films and these films have included little tobacco imagery.

MPAA’s use of tobacco descriptors: Of the 75 tobacco descriptors the MPAA assigned to films after May 10, 2007, 87 percent (65/75) went to PG and PG-13 films subsequently given limited or no US distribution or sent straight to video; 13 percent (10/75) were assigned to movies given wide distribution to US theaters. (None of the 65 movies with smoking rated “R” and released after May 10, 2007 were tobacco-labeled.)

Seventy-five percent of the 18 billion youth-rated tobacco impressions delivered to theater audiences by films rated and released since May 10, 2007 came from films without MPAA tobacco descriptors. Fewer than half (4/10) of PG-13 films featuring >50 tobacco incidents were given MPAA tobacco descriptors. No youth-rated films with tobacco distributed by Disney and News Corp. (Fox) carried a tobacco descriptor. No youth-rated, top box office film with tobacco brand display (n=5) was assigned a descriptor.

Conclusion: The MPAA’s rating “consideration” of tobacco content since May 2007 gives neither consumers nor the film industry predictable, evidence-based rating consequences for tobacco images in youth-rated films. There is no evidence that tobacco descriptors, even if they were to be consistently applied in the future, would directly or indirectly alter industry practice or reduce adolescent risk. An industry-wide set of uniform policies, including a binding R-rating for future on-screen tobacco, is required for substantial and permanent reductions in on-screen tobacco exposure.

The MPAA's policy

Smoking in motion pictures has been clearly demonstrated to stimulate adolescents and young adults to smoke; the more smoking in the movies adolescents and young adults see, the more likely they are to smoke. Because US films have a high tobacco incidence and adolescents comprise the biggest theater audience for movies, the public health effect is large. In response to this scientific evidence, since 2002 a growing number of health organizations and agencies have called on the six studios that the Motion Picture Association of America (MPAA) represents, to modernize its voluntary rating system to discourage smoking in youth-rated (G/PG/PG-13) films by rating future movies with tobacco imagery use "R." This policy would reduce youth exposure by about half, preventing approximately 200,000 adolescents from starting to smoke each year.

On May 1, 2007, Maryland's Office of Attorney General (speaking for thirty-one other AGs across the United States) wrote the MPAA:

We urge the MPAA and its member companies to fulfill this commitment to implement the [Harvard School of Public Health] recommendation to eliminate depiction of smoking from films accessible to children and youth. There is simply no justification for further delay.

On May 10, 2007, the MPAA publicly announced that it would "now" start "considering" tobacco in its film rating system but it explicitly rejected what it termed an "automatic R." The MPAA's policy announcement says that:

In the past, illegal teen smoking has been a factor in the rating of films, alongside other parental concerns such as sex, violence and adult language. Now, all smoking will be considered and depictions that glamorize smoking or movies that feature pervasive smoking outside of an historic or other mitigating context may receive a higher rating....

[W]hen a film's rating is affected by the depiction of smoking, that rating will now include phrases such as "glamorized smoking" or "pervasive smoking."

— MPAA press release, "Film ratings to consider smoking as a factor," May 10, 2007

This position was further described in a letter to the state Attorneys General:

We have updated and clarified the motion picture rating rules for the MPAA/NATO [National Association of Theatre Owners] jointly operated Classification and Rating Administration...The rating board is now considering smoking as a factor alongside other factors including violence, sexual situations and language in films...

— MPAA letter to Maryland Attorney General, May 10, 2007

The MPAA's practice

In the two years since May 10, 2007 there is no evidence that the MPAA has increased the rating of any film to "R" or even to PG-13 because of its smoking content. The MPAA has stated that one film was up-rated from G to PG because of smoking content (Saving Sarah Cain, from News Corp.'s Fox Faith unit, not distributed to theaters, debuted on cable and was released on video in January 2008).

Between May 10, 2007 and May 10, 2009, 102 youth-rated (G, PG, PG-13) films with smoking achieved Top Ten box office status in any week ("top box office") in nationwide release (Appendix 1). Eighty-four of these films received their MPAA rating after the MPAA's May 10, 2007 announcement. Of these, only 12 percent (10/84) were given a tobacco descriptor in their MPAA ratings: 50 percent (4/8) of G/PG films with tobacco imagery) and 8 percent (6/76) of PG-13 films with tobacco imagery.

None of the 65 R-rated, top box office films with smoking rated by the MPAA and released after May 10, 2007 carried tobacco descriptors. In all, the MPAA added tobacco descriptors to 7 percent (10/149) of youth- and R-rated films with tobacco imagery, rated by the MPAA after May 10, 2007 and released to theaters nationwide.

Of the 84 top box office, youth-rated films with smoking rated and released after May 10, 2007, 79 percent (66/84) were released by MPAA-member companies ("major studios"). Non-MPAA member companies ("independents") were more likely to see their youth-rated films with smoking, destined for national distribution, tagged for smoking: 33 percent (3/10) of independents' top box office PG-13 films with >10 tobacco incidents got a smoking descriptor, while 13 percent (4/30) of such films from MPAA members were given a smoking descriptor. Half of indie PG-13 films with >50 tobacco incidents received an MPAA smoking descriptor; one-third of such films distributed by major studios got the smoking descriptor.

Two MPAA member companies — Disney with three youth-rated top box office films featuring tobacco and News Corp. (Fox) with twelve — received no MPAA tobacco descriptors. GE (Universal) and Sony received two descriptors between them for 30 youth-rated top box office films with tobacco.<sup>1</sup> (Table 1).

Besides the ten top box office films discussed above, 65 other films were reviewed after May 10, 2007 by the MPAA and given tobacco descriptors (Appendix 2). All but one of these films are confirmed as having been given limited release, no US distribution or release only on DVD; the exception is possibly slated for wide release in October 2009. On average, the films in this sample given limited release to theaters earned less than $650,000 at the box office, while the films in wide release each earned, on average, more than $43 million.

The list of films given tobacco descriptors is weighted toward PG ratings. Among all youth-rated top box office films released May 2007-May 2009, 15 percent (15/102) are rated PG (none are rated "G"). Of those films given MPAA tobacco ratings, 75 percent (56/75) are PG. Sixteen percent of the PG-rated films with tobacco descriptors were

Whether or not MPAA applied a tobacco description was strongly dependent on whether or not the distributor belongs to the MPAA (Table 3). The chance of an MPAA member company's youth-rated film with known tobacco content receiving an MPAA tobacco was 26% (21/81), while an independent's chance was 79% (54/68). The difference in application of tobacco descriptors is highly statistically significant ( $P < .0005$ ).<sup>2</sup>

Table 3 | Youth-rated films with known tobacco content, by company type and release type and MPAA tobacco descriptor

Company Type	Release Type	Films Released	With tobacco descriptors	% with Descriptors
MPAA Member "Major studio"	Wide	66	6	26% (21/81)
	Limited, video or none	15	15
Non-MPAA Member "independent"	Wide	18	4	79% (54/68)
	Limited, video or none	50	50

The MPAA's practice in applying tobacco descriptors is also strongly related to whether a film being reviewed was destined for national release on thousands of screens ("wide release") or something more limited. (Having previewed the project with exhibitors and reviewed the finished product's marketability, studio-distributors have usually decided a film's release type before submitting it for MPAA rating, a formality for release in any channel.) Only 12 percent (10/84) of youth-rated films with tobacco imagery slated for wide release received tobacco descriptors; while 87 percent (65/75) of all films rated with tobacco descriptors were destined for limited release, video release or none at all. This difference is highly statistically significant ( $P < .0005$ ).

<sup>2</sup>  $P < .0005$  means that there is less than 5 chances in 10,000 that the difference in applying tobacco descriptors is unrelated to the studio's MPAA member status.

Whether or not MPAA applies a tobacco descriptor to a film also appears to be mediated by its MPAA rating. Fifty percent (4/8) of top box office films with smoking rated PG received a descriptor, although none of these films featured more than 30 tobacco incidents (Table 4). The MPAA assigned tobacco descriptors to only 3 percent (2/64) of top box office PG-13 films with the same tobacco incidence. Fewer than half (4/10) of PG-13 films with >50 tobacco incidents got MPAA tobacco descriptors; one PG-13 film with more than 100 tobacco incidents went unremarked by the MPAA. Overall, among top box office films, 60 percent (6/10) of tobacco descriptors were given to films with <30 tobacco incidents and 40 percent (4/10) were given to films with >50 incidents.

Table 4 | Top box office films with tobacco imagery, by MPAA rating, number of tobacco incidents and MPAA tobacco descriptor

Total Y-Rated	44	3	28	3	2	0	10	4
% with Descriptor		7%		11%		0%		40%

It should be noted that, although only 8% (6/72) of top box office youth-rated films with fewer than 50 tobacco incidents received tobacco descriptors, these films comprised 88% (74/84) of all top box office youth-rated films with tobacco imagery rated and released after May 10, 2007. This group of films with lower tobacco content also delivered the majority of youth-rated tobacco impressions (56%: 8 billion/14.2 billion) to theater audiences (Appendix 1).

Brand display in top box office youth-rated films appears to have played no role in the MPAA's decision to award tobacco descriptors, unless the influence was negative. None of the eleven top box office films with tobacco branding in this sample, including five youth-rated films, got an MPAA tobacco descriptor (Appendix 1). However, one top box office PG-13 film that featured close facsimiles of tobacco brands ("Marbies" for Marlboro and "American Eagle" for American Spirit) did receive a tobacco descriptor.

No important difference is apparent in MPAA's tobacco rating practice from its first year to its second year (Appendix 3). The MPAA has shifted its descriptor nomenclature: in 2007-8, 22 percent (8/36) of descriptors read, simply, "smoking" while the balance added such modifiers "some," "brief," "momentary," and "incidental." In 2008-9, 54 percent (21/39) of the MPAA's tobacco descriptors said "smoking" while the minority were modified with such terms as "some," "brief" and "incidental."

The MPAA has never used the phrases "pervasive smoking" or "glamorized smoking," as it originally proposed. Instead, it has either used "smoking," with nothing to indicate the harm potential, or modified "smoking" with terms that minimize or even justify ("historical smoking") the film's tobacco content.

Discussion

As the authors of this report noted after the MPAA tobacco ratings had been in place for their first year, the record indicates that the MPAA has ignored the expert advice it solicited from the Harvard School of Public Health (HSPH) in late February 2007, prior to announcing its new ratings treatment of tobacco imagery:

What's needed is a movie ratings policy that creates an incentive for filmmakers to consider, and worry about, the depiction of smoking as a factor in the determination of a film's rating. As [HSPH] Dean Bloom underscored, the goal should be the elimination (with rare exceptions) of smoking from youth-rated films.<sup>3</sup>

There exists no empirical evidence that boilerplate labels, such as the MPAA occasionally deploys on ratings of films with tobacco, have public health value. Especially as the MPAA has implemented its 2007 rating announcement — rarely rating films in wide release or films from its member companies, while publicly claiming that parents can learn all they need to know about tobacco content by consulting the ratings — the MPAA descriptor policy appears designed to serve the immediate political interests of the film industry rather than protect its young audience.<sup>4</sup>

The MPAA states that its ratings are advisory to parents. Unfortunately, the partial and seemingly arbitrary manner in which tobacco labels are attached to a few films with smoking and not to most others creates a false impression: it encourages parents to believe that only the small fraction of youth-rated films and DVDs with MPAA tobacco descriptors have tobacco imagery.

In contrast to the vague wording and arbitrary application of the MPAA's current tobacco rating policy, health authorities worldwide endorse a policy to rate all future smoking movies "R" with two categorical exceptions: depictions of the dire health consequences of tobacco use and depictions necessary to represent the tobacco use of a real historical figure. The R-rating would create a market disincentive for producers to include smoking in films that would otherwise be rated for more general audiences, G/PG/PG-13; consequently, they would calibrate tobacco content in films as they now calibrate violence, sexual imagery, and language — content treated much more consistently in MPAA ratings.

Conclusions

Since May 2007, top box office films in the US have delivered an estimated 27.7 billion tobacco impressions to audiences; films rated G, PG and PG-13 delivered more than half of these tobacco impressions (51%: 14.2 billion/27.7 billion).

Films assigned a tobacco descriptor by the Motion Picture Association of America delivered only 13 percent (3.5 billion/27.7 billion) of all tobacco impressions. Seventy-five percent (10.7 billion/14.2 billion) of youth-rated tobacco impressions were delivered by films with no tobacco descriptor.

<sup>4</sup> For a recent analysis of long-term trends in on-screen tobacco content see Titus, K., Polansky, J., Glantz, S. (2009) Smoking Presentation Trends in U.S. Movies 1991-2008. <http://repositories.cdlib.org/ctcre/tcpmus/Movies2008/>.

In distributing a total of ten tobacco descriptors among 84 top box office, youth-rated films with tobacco imagery, the MPAA tended to target a few PG and PG-13 films with more tobacco content. But other factors also appeared to influence which films got a descriptor: films from non-MPAA member companies never released to theaters nationally were the largest group of films given tobacco descriptors. It seems likely that low-visibility films with the least industry clout (including ten documentaries) were most likely to be tagged for smoking.

In contrast to an R-rating for smoking, no evidence exists that even consistent application of MPAA tobacco descriptors to youth-rated films with smoking would reduce adolescent exposure. The MPAA's failures to implement its own rating scheme fairly and broadly demonstrate that parents and policymakers cannot rely on the MPAA to originate an effective, industry-wide approach to the substantial, permanent reduction of adolescent exposure to on-screen tobacco imagery. Absent such an industry-wide policy, tobacco imagery in films produced for and marketed to youth will continue to promote tobacco use, with attendant risks to the health of tens of millions of young people around the world. The MPAA never announced an answer to smoking in movies. It has only helped to delay one.

Notes: "Company" is the parent of an MPAA-member studio (e.g., Viacom's studio subsidiary is Paramount). Companies marked with an asterisk are independents. "Views" are paid admissions, calculated by dividing theatrical gross sales ("box office") by the average ticket price in the year of release, as reported at nato-online.com. 2009 ticket price is estimated based on the mean of the previous two years' price change. "Views" multiplied by (observed) "Tobacco Incidents" (TUTD method) equals "Tobacco Impressions" delivered by a film to its theater audience. Box office for films in release <8 weeks is projected: see Appendix 4.

Appendix 4: Projecting theatrical box office

To calculate tobacco impressions, total box office was projected for 2009 films with fewer than eight weeks of data reported at the time of analysis, based on results from full years 2006-7. Five cases required the formula for Week 2 and five more the formula for Week 4. The table below reports the method's reliability:

Box office at Week #	Predicted final box office receipts, B ($mil) W4 = 4 week box office ($mil) W2 = 2 week box office ($mil)	Standard error of the estimate ($mil)	N	R <sup>2</sup>
4 weeks	$B\text{-OFFICE} = - 0.756 \text{ WEEK (2)} + 1.70 \text{ WEEK (4)}$	8.3	316	0.983
2 weeks	$B\text{-OFFICE} = 3.44 + 1.53 \text{ WEEK (2)}$	14.9	316	0.944
