Important Notice to Subscribers

After each mailing of the Journal, the Circulation Manager is deluged with 30-40 complaints from subscribers that their issues were not delivered. As it turns out, most of these cases involve a change of residence by the subscriber and a failure to notify the Journal that the change took place. The U.S. Postal Service does not automatically forward copies of the Journal when change-of-address forms are turned in at the local Post Office; it discards them! If you move, the only way to continue to receive the Journal is to notify us of your address change so we can mail to an existing address. As clearly indicated inside the back cover, the Journal assumes no responsibility for non-delivery in cases where a person has failed to submit a change-of-address to the Journal office. In these cases, the subscriber will have to pay for a replacement copy. This may seem unfair, but the Journal is forced to exist on the lowest budget of any major scientific publication in America. We have no paid staff and operate primarily on funds provided through your subscriptions. We welcome any financial assistance, because we want to be able to continue to publish an outstanding Journal.
