

UCLA

The Indigenous Peoples' Journal of Law, Culture & Resistance

Title

The Dust Follows the Plow

Permalink

<https://escholarship.org/uc/item/0b3238fh>

Journal

The Indigenous Peoples' Journal of Law, Culture & Resistance, 9(1)

ISSN

2575-4270

Author

Gómez, Noelia Rodriguez

Publication Date

2025

Copyright Information

Copyright 2025 by the author(s). All rights reserved unless otherwise indicated. Contact the author(s) for any necessary permissions. Learn more at <https://escholarship.org/terms>

THE DUST FOLLOWS THE PLOW

Noelia Rodriguez Gómez

Text 1: poem

Upon the plains, where dreams did grow,
We plowed the land, a new world to sow.
But in our haste, we failed to see,
The land's true nature, its mystery.

“The land was ours before we were the land's,”
A truth ignored by greedy hands.
The dust, it followed, a relentless tide,
Unveiling the consequences of our pride.

Mismanagement of land and water's grace,
Led us down a perilous, destructive chase.
Short-term profit, the guiding star,
Left scars upon the land, near and far.

Degradation of soil, erosion's toll,
The dust revealed the price of our goal.
Land speculation, a game of chance,
Brought the dust, in a deadly dance.

Government incentives, empty promises made,
Only fueled the dust's relentless crusade.
The idea of an exhaustible frontier,
Led us astray, fueled by greed and fear.

Drought descended, a relentless plight,
As the dust obscured the day from night.
The Great Plains, once so vast and wide,
Now buried beneath the dust's cruel tide.

Long in the past, some truths remained,
The bison roamed free, untouched by the pain.
Indigenous nations, in harmony they stood,
Respecting the land, as good stewards should.

The Comanche Nation, proud and strong,
Knew the land's rhythms, its ebb and song.
The Conservation Ethic, a beacon of light,
Guided those who sought to make things right.

And though the dust may obscure the sun,
We must remember, the battle's not yet won.
For in the rain, there's hope anew,
To heal the land, to start anew.

The rain, it falls, a cleansing grace,
Washing away the dust's cruel embrace.
The land and people, hand in hand,
Can restore the plains, the precious land.

So, let us learn from our mistakes of old,
As the story of the dust and land unfolds.
With care and wisdom, we'll find a way,
To ensure the dust no longer holds sway.

Text 2: poetic prose

The dust followed the plow
The dust followed land and water mismanagement
The dust followed the short-term profit
The dust followed land degradation
The dust followed soil erosion
The dust followed land speculation
The dust followed government incentives
The dust followed empty promises
The dust followed the idea of an exhaustible frontier
The dust followed the drought
The dust followed the Great Plains
The dust did not follow the bison
The dust did not follow the Indigenous nations
The dust did not follow the Comanche Nation
The dust did not follow the Conservation Ethic
The dust did not follow the rain
The rain did not follow the plow